Skin: Cleanse, Hydrate, Moisturize

Why would you want to treat your Gut if all you want is good skin care?

Because the skin is your largest organ and there is a strong connection between skin health, to include your face, and gut health. Your skin on the outside is often showing what is going on inside with your gut according to Dr. Mindy Pelz, Fast Like a Girl author.

The healthier your skin looks the more it reflects the health of your gut. Our faces are often the first sign to let us know that something might be off. The natural tendency is to quickly change topical skin care but that only confused the issue and the face.

As a rule it is best to stick with one skin care regimen for both men and women and simultaneously work on your gut health as there is large interplay. Instead of seeing skincare as a luxury, rather see it as a requirement and be sure that this skin care is of the highest and most pure quality for full efficacy.

What is Hyaluronic Acid and why is it important?

Technically, Hyaluronic Acid is a group of sugar molecules called polysaccharides, according to research. These molecules work to cushion and lubricate, and they are found naturally in the body's connective tissues, notes the Cleveland Clinic. Over time, your body's stores of hyaluronic acid decline. Age is one reason, research shows, but environmental factors — such as smoking and air pollution — also accelerate this process, according to another study. That's the bad news.

The good news is that topical products that feature hyaluronic acid, whether as part of the ingredients list in a moisturizer or as the star of a serum, can help rebuild those depleted stores, says Bonnie Gasquet, MD, an internal medicine physician at Studio Health medical center in Belle Chasse, Louisiana. "Hyaluronic acid attracts and binds to water molecules and increases the water content of the skin," says Shari Marchbein, MD, a board-certified dermatologist in private practice in New York City. It can absorb more than 1,000 times its weight in water, Dr. Marchbein says.

By focusing on the hydration of the skin at the cellular level, you actually feed your face what it needs. For example, not washing your face, not only allows the environmental toxins to layer on your skin but then also sit on your skin and enlarge the pores. If then on top of that you use sub par cosmetics with dyes and fragrance and colorants, animal by products, you are adding yet another toxin layer on your face.

In conclusion, hydrate your whole body, hydrate your overall skin and in particular your face and let Hyaluronic Acid do the hard work of working on tightness, fine lines and wrinkles on a cellular level as well as a topical one.
